Info:	Nice way to see how you can take picture's on an airfield. I was there in 1999 and I have sent letters to all bases (airforce, army and navy). I had only one or two positive response, http://asia-image.com/modules.php?name=Gallery&file=st but when I visit the gate and showed my letter I (and my wife) were nearly always invited to enter base !!!! Sometimes only to see the preserved aircraft on base, but also complete visits (including a picture made by the base photographer for their local magazine, at least they told us). I had a great visit at Pingtung after I spoke to the base general and saw more than 120 aircraft here !!! General Info: http://www.fas.org/irp/world/taiwan/af-intro.htm Also a great visit to an army base and to the Navy H-60 squadron. So, I advice send letters and if there is no response ask at their main gate. They are very polite. (MSF)

Info:	May 2011 I've never had any success at Hsinchu in the past (3 previous visits), but finally something was happening this time. Nowhere near as busy as any of the other base, but I think that's fairly normal anyway, if reports of problems with the serviceability of the Mirages are correct.

Taipei	Taipei Songshan Airport					lata / Icao code	TSA RCSS
Info:	You can usually see at least some of the ROCAF's VIP transport fleet (Fokker 50/Beech 1900/B737) on a typical visit to Sungshan, but they were strangely absent this time, despite visiting a number of times. C-130s are also common visitors, and you should be able to see at least one. The best time to visit here, however, is Friday afternoons, when the place is heaving with Hercs – they do 'shuttle' flights between here and the other Air Force bases bringing personnel to and from Taipei for leave. In a 2-hour visit I saw seven (that's over a third of the entire fleet!), and there were probably others earlier (and perhaps later) that I missed.
